Workers Escape Injury Working On Salvaged Shell

While scraping salvaged shells at the Joliet Arsenal yesterday afternoon, two employes of the Berlinsky and Son junk yards escaped injury following a slight mishap.

Steve Parasci, who resides near Rockdale, and Al Agnich, 126 Jesse street, were working on the shells, which had been emptied of powder, burned and salvaged.

AS PARASCI was chiseling a copper rotating band from a 14 inch steel projectile which had previously been burned out and salvaged his tool apparently struck a particle of contaminated material lodged between the band and shell.

According to arsenal officials there was a very small percussion charge. Parasci was knocked to the ground. A small piece of steel, believed to be from the chisel, struck Parasci in the ear but he was not injured.
